JOURNAL OF THE ASSEMBLY [February 22, 1972]

Representative Earl asked unanimous consent that the rules be suspended and that the assembly's action on the motions be immediately messaged to the senate. Granted.

RULING ON THE POINT OF ORDER

Raised by Representative Sensenbrenner on Assembly Bill 1057.

The chair ruled that the point of order was not well taken. A detailed explanation of the ruling follows.

On February 17, 1972, the assembly passed Assembly Bill 1057 by a vote of 60 to 33.

The Gentleman from Marathon 2nd then moved that the rules be suspended and that Assembly Bill 1057 be immediately messaged to the senate.

At that point the Gentleman from Milwaukee 25th raised the point of order that Assembly Bill 1057 required a two-thirds vote on passage since it constituted "banking legislation" and thus was within the scope of Section 4, Article XI, of the Wisconsin Constitution.

Section 4, Article XI, provides:

"The legislature shall have power to enact a general banking law for the creation of banks, and for the regulation and supervision of the banking business, provided that the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each house, to be taken by yeas and nays, be in favor of the passage of such law."

Assembly Bill 1057 is a comprehensive bill which regulates the extension of credit to individuals in Wisconsin. The bill regulates interest rates and charges in credit sale and loan transactions; governs disclosures of information in credit transactions; limits the use of certain contract terms and practices in consumer transactions; regulates collection and repossession procedures; provides for administration and makes an appropriation. The bill treats the subject matter generally with its provisions governing consumer transactions involving all types of creditors including sellers and both licensed and unlicensed lenders.

There have been numerous cases decided by the Supreme Court of Wisconsin bearing on the construction of the language in the Constitution and also several opinions of the Attorney General relating to the application of this section of the Constitution to legislation.

The most concise summary of the law on the subject is found in the opinion of the Attorney General in 20 O.A.G. 1127 (1931) at Page 1128, as follows:

"The constitution formerly required the approval of banking legislation by the vote of the people, but in 1902 the clause was changed to its present form by amendment. The supreme court has construed these provisions in a number of cases. The gist of the decisions is that the constitutional requirement applies to substantive changes in the laws governing the creation of banks and the regulation and supervision of the banking business. General laws applying to banks as well as others which do not materially affect the creation of banks and the regulation and supervision of the banking business do not require a two-thirds vote. Rock River Bank v. Sherwood, 10 Wis. 230, 240; Van Steenwyck v. Sackett, 17 Wis. 645; Brower v. Haight, 18 Wis. 102; In re Koetting, 90 Wis. 166; Northwestern Nat'l Bank v. Superior, 103 Wis. 43; State ex rel. Mandelker v. Mandelker, 197 Wis. 518."

An exhaustive review of the Wisconsin Supreme Court decisions discloses no instance in which a statute having general application to banks and to others has been held to be banking legislation within the scope of the constitutional requirement of a two-thirds vote. In each case where the constitutional provision has been found to apply, the legislation in question dealt directly and exclusively with banks, their business, regulation or supervision. E.g. State ex re. Reedsburg Bank v. Hastings, 12 Wis. *47 (1860), involving a specific tax on banks; Van Steenwyck v. Sackett, 17 Wis. 645 (1862), involving a statutorily required provision in bonds issued by banks; Rusk v. Van Norstrand, 21 Wis. 161 (1866), involving statutory provisions for stockholder bonds for bank stockholders; and State ex. rel Bergh v. Sparling, 129 Wis. 164 (1906), involving the statute creating the banking department. Consequently, the judicial case law in Wisconsin leaves no doubt that the requirement of a two-thirds affirmative vote contained in Section 4, Article XI, does not apply to general legislation like Assembly Bill 1057.

The most recent opinion of the Attorney General bearing on this question is found in 50 O.A.G. 139 (1961). At issue were two pending tax bills which would have directly affected banks by partially disallowing as deductions for state income tax purposes certain expenses incidental to the purchase and carrying of tax-exempt federal obligations. Despite the substantial economic impact of these bills on banks, and even though they were undoubtedly specifically aimed at banks as the principal purchasers of government securities, the bills were held not to constitute banking legislation. In that opinion, the Attorney General stated:

"Nothing in these proposed provisions in any way says how, when or where a bank shall conduct its banking operations or that (sic) prohibits or restricts the exercise of any authority to carry on banking activities. They do not take away or cut down any right or privilege accorded to banks by any provisions of the banking laws. Such provisions are proposed as part of a general scheme of taxation as applied to banks as a particular class of taxpayers coming thereunder." 50 O.A.G. 145,46.

Similarly, Assembly Bill 1057 constitutes "a general scheme" of consumer credit regulations which will apply to banks merely as one class of creditors coming thereunder. In no sense is it specifically designed for, or aimed at, banks in particular, as was the case with the tax bills under consideration in this opinion.

The only provision of Assembly Bill 1057 which deals specifically with banks is its repeal of Section 220.04 (6) (c) of the statutes which authorizes the Commissioner of Banking to permit banks to impose a service charge not to exceed $1 per 90 days on loans under $1000. Under the authority of this section, the Commissioner presently permits the maximum charge. Wis. Adm. Code Bkg. 3.01. Since the allowance and amount of this charge is wholly discretionary with the Commissioner and the charge can be disallowed at any time, the repeal of this section does not "take away or cut down any right or privilege accorded to banks by any provision of the banking laws." Moreover, the service charge repeal affects only the price for banking services, like the general usury law which the cases have held not to constitute banking legislation. Brower v. Haight, 18 Wis. 109 (*102) (1864). Such pricing provisions do not "prohibit or restrict the exercise of any authority to carry on banking functions."

JOURNAL OF THE ASSEMBLY [February 22, 1972]

In 1938, the Attorney General held that Wisconsin's Motor Vehicle Sales Finance Law, Section 218.01, does not constitute banking legislation. That law established a comprehensive scheme for the regulation of the sales and financing of motor vehicles and imposed finance charge limitations, required prepayment rebates, notification requirements upon assignment of a contract, disclosures of credit cost to customers, sales practice prohibitions, and licensing for salesmen, dealers and financial institutions, including banks, to which purchase contracts were assigned. Administration of the law was assigned to the Commissioner of Banking. 27 O.A.G. 839 (1938).

The present bill, Assembly Bill 1057, creates a similar comprehensive scheme for the regulation of all consumer credit transactions, including those involving automobiles, under the jurisdiction of the Commissioner of Banking. It applies to banks in the same way that Section 218.01 does, not because they engage in the business of banking as constitutionally defined, but because they are simply one type of creditor engaged in extending automobile financing and other consumer credit.

Although Assembly Bill 1057 affects all consumer creditors, and brings many of them under the jurisdiction of the banking commissioner for the first time, the extension of consumer credit is not exclusively a banking function and therefore the bill does not constitute banking legislation. The powers of banks, and of the banking commissioner over banks, are not affected by the bill.

The precedents contained in rulings of the chair of both houses of the legislature support the conclusion that the vote required for passage of Assembly Bill 1057 is only a simple majority.

On January 15, 1970, the speaker ruled that Senate Bill 576 relating to directors and employees of national banks did not require a two-thirds vote on the grounds that the bill was not banking legislation, but an amendment to the criminal law. Assembly journal, Jan. 15, 1970, pp. 3409, 3417.

On December 20, 1961, the chair ruled in the senate that Assembly Bill 716 relating to imposition of a franchise tax on financial institutions and other matters did not require a two-thirds vote. Even though the bill made changes in the section of the statutes relating to deductions permitted banks, the chair ruled the bill affected income tax law which applies to corporations in general and was therefore not subject to the requirement of a two-thirds vote. Senate journal, Dec. 20, 1961, pp. 2515-16.

On July 6, 1961, the president of the senate ruled that Senate Bill 534 did not require a two-thirds vote for passage. The bill established maximum interest rates for loans under $5,000. The chair ruled that a two-thirds vote was not required because (1) the bill affected chapter 115 which related to money and interest, not chapters 220-224 which related specifically to banking; (2) the section applies to other persons as well as banks, and such provisions are not regulation of banking (citing many of the authorities relied upon in this decision); (3) Section 4, Article XI of the Constitution must be strictly construed in the interests of effective legislation. Senate journal, June 28, 1961 and July 6, 1961, pp. 1537, 1599-1600.

On December 10, 1959, the assembly speaker ruled that Assembly Bill 1000 and Assembly Bill 999 did not require two-thirds vote. The bills were omnibus taxing bills which included provisions for the taxation of banks. The chair ruled the bills were clearly "taxation" and not "regulation." Assembly journal, Dec. 10, 1959, pp. 2713-14, 2717-18.

On July 9, 1947, the president of the senate ruled that Assembly Bill 181 which provided for the transfer of certain licensing functions to the Banking Department did not require a two-thirds vote. The chair ruled that the transfer of licensing functions to the Banking Department did not bring the bill within the special constitutional provision relating to the passage of banking bills. Senate journal, July 9, 1947, pp. 1734-35.

Assembly Bill 1057 is a comprehensive, general measure applying to all types of creditors, including banks, in their dealings with consumers. It is well established that general legislation of this type does not constitute banking legislation within Section 4, Article XI of the Wisconsin Constitution.

Therefore, the point of order raised by the gentleman from Milwaukee 25th is not well taken.

NORMAN C. ANDERSON,
Speaker.
